Anti-Politics Machine: Development, Depoliticization, and...

The Anti-Politics Machine is a 1994 book by James Ferguson.This book is a critique of the concept of "development" in general, viewed through the lens of failed attempts, specifically the Thaba-Tseka Development Project in Lesotho from 1975–1984. He writes about the countless "development agencies" that have their hand in the so-called "Third World" but points out the consistent failure of ...

In The Anti-Politics Machine, James Ferguson examines the failure of the Thaba-Tseka rehabilitation project in the seventies to demonstrate that development institutions create their own discourse and perspectives that are counterproductive to their goal of aiding the country in question. Before detailing the evidence that shows what mistakes were made during the different phases of the Thaba-Tseka rehabilitation project, the author provides a very useful theoretical perspective that ...

Book Review: The anti-politics machine: 'development'...

The Anti-Politics Machine is an acutely critical, highly imaginative excursion into the world of 'development.' It succeeds splendidly in unmasking the ideological scaffolding of that world, in revealing its unspoken axioms and taken-for-granted forms. Although focused on Lesotho, the study has almost universal resonances.

James Ferguson: The anti-politics machine: 'development'...

The Anti-Politics Machine is a critique of contemporary political socialization by American anthropologist James Ferguson. It focuses mainly on the general term "development" that has been taken up frequently in economics, sociology, and other fields, arguing that it is less a rigorous concept than a political linguistic mechanism which frames as inevitable and ideal the world's existing hegemonic powers and their selfish goals.
