Futons are very cost-effective guest bed alternatives. You will be able to buy a futon at a very low price, so this might be the easiest solution for you to choose. If you want a bed that will be able to function as a seat in a guest room, then this is going to work well. It may not be the most comfortable option, but it is a practical one. Cons:

Add a blanket and a sleeping pillow, and you're good to go. Daybeds are also great options for home offices, too. And yes, companies make fancy styles with decorative frames like Meg's, but you could do this on the cheap with a twin bed in a regular bed frame. Just push the bed up against the wall horizontally and pile on the pillows.

For a guest bed, you can also consider an ottoman bed. It's a good way to hide an extra bed, and it's also a good leg rest for the sofa or a way to get a few extra seats in the living room. It's a thin foam mattress because it has to fold into the ottoman, so it's not the most comfortable choice, but for a night or two once in a while, it's definitely better than sleeping on the floor.
