We have used adhesive velcro to hold on the filler panel underneath the oven but put a small screw through it to secure it in place. The curtains that let in the least amount of light are pencil pleat on a traditional track. Anything on a pole will let light in because there is a gap between the pole and the wall. A pelmet would help.

So it's no coincidence that the public exhibition 'Letting in the Light' in Stratford seeks to uplift and illuminate through art, created by people with personal histories of mental illness. The exhibition, organised by the Stratford-based arts and mental health organisation Daily Life Ltd, is located on a typically depressing inner-city stretch of pavement, between a betting shop and the public library.

The easiest way to bring more outside light into your house is to clean and open up your windows so they're letting in as much light as possible. However, even if you don't have a ton of bright windows in your home, there are still things you can do to make it sunnier, like painting your walls a lighter color and using reflective decor.
