Illicit Happiness To me, a good book is always the one that inflicts a change in me. It could be positive, negative or even something which is neutral, but if it changes anything within me, it is good enough. The Illicit Happiness of Other People is a strange book. I know it's a good one, because it definitely changed something inside me.

Manu Joseph 's perfectly named novel, The Illicit Happiness of Other People, is both a terribly funny and deeply sad story of a father 's quest for the reason behind his 17-year-old son 's suicide. This beautifully written work is all at once a philosophical and psychological inquiry, a study of family dynamics, a mystery, and a story of how we construct identities and narratives.

The Illicit Happiness of Other People is set in Madras (now called Chennai), in southern India, around 1990. At its center is the Chacko family: Ousep, the once-promising Malayalam author now reduced to working as a journalist for the United News of India news agency; his wife, Mariamma, prone to intensely talking to herself; twelve-year-old son Thoma; and son Unni -- dead three years now, but still a significant presence in the household.

The Illicit Happiness of Other People could be seen as an exploration of a variety of mental health problems, and these do drive much of the plot: the delusions of schizophrenia, a traumatic event in Mariamma's past, visits to hospitals and neuropsychiatrists, a case of the extremely rare Cotard's delusion, and so forth. But Joseph's characters are too complex to be confined by labels or cliches; they are also fully integrated into their broader familial and social worlds.

~~The Illicit Happiness of Other People (Manu Joseph)—review~~

His second novel, The Illicit Happiness of Other People, was published in September 2012. The semi-autobiographical novel was described by The Wall Street Journal as a work that "injects dark, rueful laughter into an immensely touching story of loss". He also wrote the screenplay of Love Khichdi (2009).
